Medical College, the site of the original residence. The apartments will be in charge of the trustees of the college, and it is understood that Senator Brantley, of Georgia, will make the presentation address.

The society will give a reception in the museum from 3 to 5 P. M., preceding the unveiling, to the trustees, the students of the college and their guests.

The tablet is one of a series which the Confederate Memorial Literary Society is erecting to mark historic sites in connection with the Confederacy. A committee of considerable interest, appointed at this meeting, will look into the feasibility of the society's publishing the many valuable manuscripts on file in the museum. Mrs. Moffett was appointed chairman of the committee.

Invitations were received by the officers and members of the society for the services and exercises in connection with the unveiling of the tablet, which will be held at the Oakwood Association building, 1015 Oakwood Avenue, on Monday afternoon, May 13, at 2 o'clock. The unveiling will take place at 3 o'clock. The tablet will be unveiled at 3 o'clock. The unveiling will take place at 3 o'clock.

Miss Kate Mason Rowland presented to the museum a small gold ring given by the patients of Winder Hospital, in this city, during the war to Miss Emily Mason, one of the nurses, and left by Miss Mason to Miss Rowland. Letters of sympathy were ordered written to Mrs. A. W. Garber, Mrs. R. A. Patterson, Mrs. O. A. Jones, and to Mrs. Sullivan, of New York, regent of the Solid South Room on the death of Mrs. L. Zebion Duke, of New York.

Called Meeting.

There will be a called meeting of all the committees of the Confederate Memorial Literary Society, at 11 o'clock in the morning, at the museum, on Monday, May 13, at 11 o'clock. The meeting is important, and all members of these committees are asked to be present this morning.

Alumnae to Meet.

FRIENDLY INTEREST FELT IN ENGAGEMENT

Millie. Roberte de Neufville Will Wed Viscount Duncannon.

BY LA MARQUISE DE FONTENAY.

UCHE friendly interest has been aroused, both in Paris and in London, by the engagement of Miss. Roberte de Neufville, only daughter of Baron and Baroness de Neufville, to Viscount Duncannon, son of the Earl of Bessborough. This Anglo-French alliance, strange to say, since, as a general rule, any proposed union is met by voters of elements not always cordial or flattering—meets with unanimous approval. True, the affianced couple are admirably matched in position, fortune, and looks; also they are reported to be very much in love with each other, which is in these days a really extraordinary coincidence.

One of the Neufvilles belongs to an old French family if one is to believe "Le Hozier," who, as everybody knows, makes a dictionary of French nobility. Indeed, the de Neufvilles are mentioned on page 1294 of one of his ponderous volumes, being entitled to bear arms as follows: "Azure, a chevron, or, between three roses argent, stalked and leaved with the same, and in chief argent, a crescent sable, between two stars, gold."

What, however, will interest people on this side of the Atlantic much more than those trifling details is that Roberte de Neufville is the daughter of an officer of the Legion of Honor, but also head of the great banking house of Neufville & Co., a regent of the Bank of France, a director of the Paris Lyons Mediterranean Railroad, a director of the Ottoman Bank, not to mention half-a-dozen other dignities belonging to the financial and social world.

Miss. Roberte de Neufville is a delightful type of the modern French maiden, re-touched in the most delicate and becoming fashion by that splendor of the Anglo-Saxon culture which rides well and sits her horse squarely. Her father is a horseman of no slender merit, and he doubtless showed her, from her infancy, how to handle a horse. As to Lord Duncannon, he is everything that a young Englishman of birth and breeding should be. All the members of his family are noted for their good looks. Indeed, over a century ago, one of them, Lord Ponsonby, the great-grandfather of the first Earl of Bessborough, and who was the handsomest youth of his day, owed his life to his striking appearance.

The incident occurred in Paris in 1791, when there was all over France a strong feeling against England. Lord Ponsonby, in his wanderings about the olden palaces of the city, happened to fall in with mob, and was at once seized by an angry, drunken lot of men and women who took up the cry, started by one of them, "A la lanterne!" the lamp-post of the street being the most convenient object to convert into a gallows. He was pushed and dragged along the street corner, the rope that usually held the lantern was placed around his neck and he was hauled up, actually hanging in mid-air, when the women—it will be remembered what a fanatical part they played in the great Revolution—as if by a common impulse, rushed forward, cut the cord and let him drop to the ground exclaiming that he was too handsome a boy to be hanged, even though he was an Englishman, and, hearing him off carefully, tended him until he had recovered from his injuries.

Lord Duncannon's father, the Earl of Bessborough, was one of the first members of the peerage to go into business. He is a many-sided man having been in turn an officer of the army, a member of the House of Commons, a member of the bar, then for a number of years private secretary to the Speaker of the House of Commons. He was appointed High Sheriff of Carlisle County in 1898, and is now Justice of the Peace for the counties of Middlesex, Carlisle, and Lancashire. The Countess of Grace, St. John of Jerusalem besides being Baron Bessborough, Baron Ponsonby, (the family patronymic) and Baron Duncannon. Not only is she one of the other distinctions, namely those of Knight Commander of the Victorian Order, and Commander of the Bath. He was a member of that party of gay young fellows who accompanied King George's sailor uncle, the Duke of Edinburgh, on his trip around the world on board the Gaika, which was associated with him, Admiral Lord Charles Beresford, Admiral Sir Adolphus FitzGeorge, Lord Kilmorey, and others.

His business experience has been as extensive as his official employment including, as it does, the presidency of the company that owns and manages that long list of table waters as the Gordon Hotels, the chairmanship of the Ashanti Gold Field Corporation, and of the Company which supplies one of the most popular of table waters, namely, Apollinaris, which ought indeed, to endear him to those who have the cause of temperance at heart. As to Lord Duncannon he is about thirty-one years of age, and, like his father, is a member of the bar. He was educated at Harrow and at Trinity College, Cambridge, because of his position of the Inner Temple in 1903; in 1906 contested the Carmarthen borough for Parliament; in 1907 was elected a member of the London County Council, an important body if ever there was one, and in 1910 successfully contested the borough of Cheltenham being elected to represent that city in Parliament. He is better known on this side of the water as Vere Ponsonby, the name which he bore until he became Viscount Duncannon. Of course, his title of Lord Duncannon is merely one of courtesy, and he has, as yet, no seat in the House of Lords. If he had, he would be ineligible for election to the House of Commons.

It is sincerely to be hoped that the union of this young man and Miss. Roberte de Neufville, pledged under such favorable auspices, with enormous wealth, good looks, and love on both sides, to a degree quite out of the ordinary, will prove as happy as all the friends of both families expect.

The British Admiralty has just created a new post and has selected an Irishman for the post. The title of Admiral of Patrols, and the officer in question is Rear Admiral John Michael de Robeck. He will have under his command four flotillas of destroyers. By the way, the brother of that Baron von Robeck who visited these shores last November, while a member of the Swedish nobility, is an Irishman, if being born and bred in Ireland, with several generations of Irish forbears, is enough to make one a son of Erin. Although Admiral de Robeck is now an officer of the British navy, his great grandfather fought on the side of the Americans in the Revolutionary War. This Baron de Robeck was purely a Swede, and was serving in the Swedish army as a cornet of cavalry, but obtaining leave of the Swedish King, he joined a French Dragoon regiment, under orders for America, and served under Rochambeau. Returning to France in 1783, he received a handsome pension for his services in America, and made his way back to Sweden. Having fallen in love with a beautiful Irish girl, daughter and heiress of Richard Fitzpatrick, younger brother of the Earl of Upper Ossory, he migrated to Ireland, was naturalized a British subject by special act of Parliament, and, though his wife became possessed of all her father's grandfather's and uncle's property. His son served under the Duke of Wellington throughout the Peninsular War.

The family name of the de Robecks is Fesk. Besides the Irish and Swedish, there is a Russian branch, the head of which latter is the Lieutenant General Fesk who distinguished himself in connection with the defense of Port Arthur, during the Russo-Japanese War.
